Essay: "Be yourself" Part 16
by the Watchman

...to all the children whom he cherishes...

A young man called to tell me some good news.
"Sir, I got a job at a nursing home.
I'm going to make the people there smile again!"
He sounded happy and full of life.

He had been working hard from a young age, pushed by his parents. They always compared him to his brilliant older brother. He ended up running away from home just before his university entrance exam. A few days later, when he ran out of money, he went home and happened to hear the carefree laughs of his family. He snapped and decided to go somewhere far away, never to return. To get the money, he robbed six video rental stores.

I met the boy by chance, on the way home from my usual round. It was late in the night, and he was on the bank of Tama River. He was sitting, shaking, his red hat drawn down onto his face. I sat down next to him and simply said: "What's the matter?" He started crying, his fist coiled tightly, his shoulders shaking. "I teach at a night college. What happened?" I waited for a long time. "I robbed some stores. There's nothing else for me to do now but to kill myself," he confessed.

"What's done is done. We can't undo the past, but we can still change the future. You must turn yourself in, pay for your crimes," I told him calmly. As the first light of the rising sun reflected on the water surface, he responded: "I'm going to turn myself in, to redeem myself. But I'm sure my parents will abandon me. How about you? Will you stay by my side?" I lightly held his shoulders.

He turned himself in.
He turned back to look at me many times
when they were taking him to his prison.
I cried out to him:
"I will wait for you!"

The past still weighs down on his heart even now.
It is impossible to erase one's past, but he does not try to run away from it. He is overwriting his stained past with a beautiful and gentle present.

My children, we can never erase the past,
but we can forge a marvelous future, just like he did.
